URGENT

If you're not freaking out about
Net Neutrality right now, you're not paying attention.

Imagine if Internet service providers are able to slow down or block access to websites that provide fair and accurate information about Muslims and Islam, including websites of mosques, Islamic schools, Muslim businesses, humanitarian charities, advocacy groups, legal organizations and other Muslim organizations?

This could be our future unless we raise our voices for freedom, but we have to act now because the deadline for public comments to the FCC is this coming Monday, July 17.

Internet service providers, like AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon, have teamed up with Trump's new FCC chairman, a former Verizon lawyer. They have a plan to kill the protections that prevent these cable monopolies from controlling what you can see

If they succeed, this will open the floodgates for companies like Comcast to slow down and censor websites and apps that don't pay them — or that they don't like for political reasons.

We have to stop them: Tell the FCC “we need net neutrality.”

Internet users from across the political spectrum are uniting to defend net neutrality because the future of Internet freedom is at stake right now.

AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon want the power to decide who gets to go fast and who gets to go slow online, stifling free speech and censoring alternative voices.

We have to flood the FCC with comments and get Congress to oppose this attack on Internet freedom, or corporations will control the Internet, forever.

In times like these, this isn't just about complicated tech laws and boring Internet rules, it's about freedom, justice and the future of humanity.

Any attempt to censor voices on the Internet is an attack on all of our freedoms.
